

"It feels good to have a place where people care that I hurt." ~ Susan

"A place where the sorrow in my heart is understood without words.." ~ Sandra

"This group was a true crossroads experience for me. I learned how my hurt was keeping me bound through bitterness. I came to see how I inflicted my pain on those I loved. But the most devastating effect of my unresolved hurts was the distorted view it gave me of God. The Lord used this group to reveal His love to me and to save my life and my home." ~ Min

Grief affects everyone differently. Because of that, it's impossible to know how parents will react to the death of their child.

Even if the parent has had very little time to "know" their child, the parental connection is still strong. This attachment can begin even before conception as dreams for the future take hold.

When a child is lost, parents also feel the loss of the future that they looked forward to spending with that child.
